

MR. GLADSTONE SUMMONED.

THE QUEEN SENDS FOR HIM AFTER HER INTERVIEW WITH SALISBURY.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The Queen accepted the resignation of Salisbury and his Cabinet with a sigh, and it is believed, at his own solicitation. The Tory leader's fixed opinion that home rule, in its naked simplicity, will never be accepted by the British voter, is probably shared by her Majesty in its fullest sense. The Queen this evening summoned Mr. Gladstone for a consultation. Previous to Mr. Gladstone's being summoned it was reported that the Queen hesitated between the ex-Premier and Lord Hartington, and had ordered the Ministers not to surrender their seals of office until Monday.

The deadlock between Mr. Gladstone and Lord Hartington continues, the latter holding that the removal of disorders in Ireland is primarily necessary.

The summoning of Gladstone, however distasteful to the Queen, was a necessary vindication of the Constitution, as well as an act of royal submission to the popular will. The sovereign has no politics, but the sovereign is a woman, and while she may technically personate a monarch, she cannot be supposed to personate a politician. It is not to be supposed that the Queen, who has been the hyacinth of the British people, will ever be able to understand the intricacies of the House of Commons.

There was marked activity during the day among the Whigs, whose chances of coming into power have been greatly magnified by the resignation of Salisbury. Lord Hartington, the late Liberal Home Secretary, undertook the character of peace-maker, and has been busy during the day in bringing about a reconciliation between him and Mr. Gladstone. Lord Hartington, however, in his determination to oppose both home rule and its advocates to the bitter end, has been unable to bring about a reconciliation. He has, however, in his determination to oppose both home rule and its advocates to the bitter end, has been unable to bring about a reconciliation.

The Government has arranged to largely reinforce the troops in Ireland in view of the possible renewal of the Gordon act. It is believed that the Government will be able to do this without incurring any serious financial loss.

The Duke of Westminster has retracted his recent charge against the Irish National League. He says he is unable to remember the words which he used in the event of his being asked to assist Mr. Gladstone.

BIG VIGNAUX GETS THE LEAD.

OVERHAULING WIZARD CHASPER TRICE IN A NIGHT.

Babel at the Billiard Match—Vignaux and the Referee—Hundred-Score Runs 1800—A Night of Very Hard Luck.

The first thing little Jacob Schaefer did was to take his walk into the Commercial Hotel in his dandy little swallow tail and white waistcoat, to extend his right hand toward Jack Sheehan. Sheehan dropped into a big jewel case of Turkish leather, lined with red, white, and blue satin. Nestling on the satin was a gold-plated horseshoe plate. This cheering inscription was on it:

Good luck to Jacob Schaefer, champion billiard player of the world. This show was won by Sheehan, 1885, the king of the American turf.

The first thing big Maurice Vignaux did was to roll up 15 caroms just as soon as he got a chance to get at the ivory. He didn't have to wait for the chance, for Schaefer missed right off. The first roll was a perfect one, and Vignaux was in the lead.

Vignaux's run of 15 opened the fourth session of the long 3,000-point game. For the first time, the score was 1,000 to 0. Vignaux had a distinct game of 600 points. The big Frenchman had a distinct game of 600 points.

BROKER TINKER'S DAUGHTER.

Remains Why the Court Thinks she Should Remain with her Grandmother.

John H. Tinker, a stock broker of 56 Broadway, living in Flatbush, applied to the Supreme Court in Brooklyn for the custody of his only child, Grace, aged 12, who was with her grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Niemann of this city. The matter was referred to Judge Joseph Nelson as referee. He filed his report on Monday.

In September last Mr. Tinker was anxious to place his child, whose mother is dead, in St. Catherine's Home, in Washington avenue, Brooklyn, which is under the supervision of Bishop Littlejohn. He paid $200 in advance, but when he took her to the home, he found that his daughter was not there. # SHIRKING CHARMERS' ANGRY.

The Progressive Union is Negotiating for a Compromise on Their Own Hook.

The situation of the elgimakers' lockout was changed yesterday by the movements of the Progressive Union and the Central Labor Union. About a week ago a committee of the Central Labor Union waited on the manufacturers' Association, and the latter agreed that the committee had only asked if the manufacturers' published manifesto asking for arbitration was official. But since that time the manufacturers, at every day's meeting, have apparently been expecting somebody. They have held long meetings and done little except to wait. Yesterday morning, however, a committee of the manufacturers' Association waited on the Central Labor Union and six from the Progressive Union met them and had a long conference. After it was over all hands said that they had resolved to continue until decisive action had been agreed on.

The news of the meeting was like a bombshell to the ranks of the International Union. They understood from their men that the Progressive Union had offered to settle, and that the manufacturers' Association had agreed to a compromise. The situation was a slight advance on the part of the Progressive Union, and that they could do nothing but wait. The situation was a slight advance on the part of the Progressive Union, and that they could do nothing but wait.
